Building Executive Functioning Skills with Our Comets

At Keheley, we're helping our Comets learn important life skills that go beyond academics — skills like staying organized, managing time, and planning ahead. These "executive functioning" skills help students succeed not just in elementary school, but all the way through middle school, high school, and beyond!

Here are a few simple ways we're supporting these habits at school — and how families can reinforce them at home:

- 🕒 Managing Time: Teachers often use visual timers in the classroom to help students see how much time is left to finish a task or transition smoothly to the next activity.
- 📅 Using Agendas: Students are encouraged to write down important dates, assignments, and goals in their agendas each week.
- 🗂️ Staying Organized: We talk about having a "place for everything" — keeping desks, baskets, and folders neat so materials are easy to find.
- 👥 Working Together: Group projects and partner work give students a chance to share ideas and learn organization and planning strategies from one another.
- 🧹 Clean Desk Fridays: Every Friday, students take time to clean and organize their desks — a great habit to build responsibility and start the next week prepared!

Families can extend these routines at home by:

- 🧹 Cleaning out backpacks over the weekend to prepare for the new week.
- 👕 Laying out clothes the night before to make mornings smoother.
- 🧸 Building daily responsibilities like helping set the table, feeding a pet, or tidying up toys or study areas — all great ways to strengthen responsibility and planning skills.

Small steps like these help children feel confident, capable, and ready to take on each new day with independence and pride.

"The secret of getting ahead is getting started." — Mark Twain

Warmly,

Dr. Felicia Angelle
